

2011: Political passion

By: Surfboy, Fri, 03rd Apr 09 1:34am

191 Views, 1 Nods, 6 Comments..

In the USA the number of people that vote is staggering, and not only that, when they get behind somebody you really know it, just look at the amount of people that would follow Obama and McCain.

These people really have passion about who is in charge of their country they think who ever they follow can make a difference. America worked George W out pretty quickly and from that moment most of America came together to rid their selves of this idiot.

George W managed to unite many Americans that had never shared the same view before, he gave them passion for the fight to have a new leader, someone who did not mimic him, someone who might just make a difference, someone who could unite a nation once more.

Back to Bungle, sorry Gordon Brown our mighty leader who was handed the role of leader not elected, a man that could clear a brothel on happy hour if he started to talk, a man that splits a nation in to several groups. This man might just be our saviour purely because he and his staff are so bad at the jobs they were elected to do, they say they listen but do they really? I'm sure some have more important things to do like cover up their husbands porn pay per view only for it to come to light anyway.

My prediction is that for the first time in a long time we are going to become passionate about our politics once more, not simply talk about in the pub, but actually do something about it. We will for the first time in a long time be looking for someone to lead from the front. I think which ever party has the right man or woman is going to see more interest then ever before, shock is needed in the current climate of our politics if they have any sense they are going to exploit every failing in the last years as much as they can and they should concentrate on the leader not the party for once.

But it should be more than that they should give us someone who has a backbone and has lived and breathed our great country for many years.

We will have the power, and I think as a nation we will put aside our differences for the greater good, to stop us from being exploited any more and to protect our country for our selves for a change and not worry about what everyone else thinks, Europe for example!.

Passion will once again find us a leader, together we will ride this storm, the future beckons greatness for the few who dare to dream.

More importantly we will have the power and i think

Comments: Most recent last

PaulaK

Fri, 03rd Apr 2009

Good read, I need more passion when it comes to politics, maybe I could get enthused and start the revolution!

TheGreatVisionar

Mon, 06th Apr 2009

Surfboy I love this. The only problems i foresee is that the Political Correctness Brigade will try to silence anybody with a passion to make this country Great again. Until there is real unrest amongst the people, no-one will be allowed to stand up and be heard. You talked about the passion of the Americans, we unfortunately, as Fluffy wrote, have the new word 'Meh'

PaulaK

Mon, 06th Apr 2009

Surfboy should take over sports and leisure, everyone would be super fit and not allowed too much junk.

radiosw

Mon, 06th Apr 2009

Now if denny's predictions come true none of this will matter by 2012, but yes I think the next elections will be more about passion for things than ever before.